Unit 5

MOTHER NATURE (Poem)

STANZA 1

Nature, the gentlest mother,
Impatient of no child,
The feeblest or the waywardest,
Her admonition mild

PARAPHRASING:

Nature is gentle, peaceful, and patient with all her children. She shows the same care and kindness to the weak and the most unusual among them. She treats every living being equally without showing any favoritism or discrimination. Even when she corrects or warns her children, she does so in a soft and gentle manner. In this passage, Nature is presented as a loving and protective mother who cares deeply for all her children. Describing Nature as a mother is an example of personification, as it gives Nature human qualities such as love, care, and compassion.

STANZA 2

In forest and the hill
By traveller is heard,
Restraining rampant squirrel
Or too impetuous bird.

In these lines, the poet presents Nature as a loving and caring mother. Nature is present in the forests and on the hills, where travelers can hear her gentle voice. She lovingly controls the wild squirrel and calms the restless bird when they become too active. She guides and protects all her children with kindness and patience. Nature maintains peace and discipline among all living creatures without using force. These lines show that Nature cares equally for every creature and always works to keep them safe and in harmony. The poet uses personification to describe Nature as a wise and protective mother.

STANZA 3

How fair her conversation,
A summer afternoon,
Her household, her assembly;
And when the sun goes down

In the third stanza, the poet once again draws our attention to Nature and admires the way she performs her duties. Nature remains active and beautiful throughout every season and every change. She is presented as a loving mother who carefully manages her household. The words household and assembly strengthen the idea of personification by showing Nature as a mother who looks after all her children, including the plants, trees, birds, and animals. She protects every part of her green world with equal love and care. The last line of the stanza prepares the reader for the next scene by shifting the setting from daytime to evening as the sun slowly sets.

STANZA 4

Her voice among the aisles
Incites the timid prayer

Of the minutest cricket,
The most unworthy flower

In this stanza, Nature is shown as praying and listening to the voices of even the tiniest living creatures. The image of her voice moving through the aisles, which are commonly associated with a church, creates a peaceful and sacred atmosphere. It suggests that Nature is devoted and compassionate, much like a loving mother who prays for all her children. She does not ignore those that appear weak or insignificant. Dickinson especially mentions the "unworthy flower" to emphasize that even a flower considered unattractive or withered deserves love and care. Since flowers are often seen as symbols of beauty, referring to one as "unworthy" highlights Nature's unconditional love and acceptance. Through this image, Dickinson shows that Mother Nature values and protects every living thing, regardless of its appearance or importance.

When all the children sleep
She turns as long away.
As will suffice to light her lamps;
Then, bending from the sky

The opening line presents a peaceful night when all of Nature's children are sleeping. These children represent every living creature on Earth. Although they are at rest, Nature remains busy carrying out her endless tasks. In the following lines, Nature is described as traveling a great distance to prepare the light for the next day. The expression "bending from the sky" refers to the sun gradually setting below the horizon. As daylight fades, Nature begins making arrangements for the sunrise of the next morning. This stanza creates a beautiful picture of the close of one day and Nature's continuous efforts to welcome a new one.

STANZA 6

With infinite affection
And infiniter care,
Her golden finger on her lip,
Wills silence everywhere.

The final stanza describes the close of the night, creating a peaceful atmosphere before a new day begins and the natural cycle starts again. Nature is portrayed as a loving and caring mother who gently quiets her children by placing a finger on her lips, spreading silence all around. The golden finger symbolizes a perfect mother whose gentle touch has the magical ability to calm her children immediately. Her care is gentle but powerful, bringing stillness and peace everywhere she touches. This stanza highlights Nature's kindness, love, and protective care for all living beings.
