Tips for Entry Test

Preparation:

- Know the test pattern first. Understand the number of MCQs, subjects, weightage, and duration before you begin studying.
- Start with the syllabus. Cover the official syllabus topic by topic, giving more time to high-weightage subjects.
- Build strong concepts. Understanding a topic is far more important than raata.
- Practice regularly. Solve MCQs every day and attempt full-length past papers under timed conditions.
- Review your mistakes. Keep a record of the questions you get wrong and revise them often.
- Strengthen weak areas. Spend extra time on the topics you find difficult instead of repeating what you already know.
- Be consistent. Studying daily with consistency is a lot better than late night cramming.

Before the Test:

- Rest well. Get a full night of sleep before the test. Do not study late into the night.
- Revise lightly. Review formulas, key concepts, and short notes, and avoid starting new topics.

- Prepare your documents. Keep your admit card, original CNIC or B-Form, and any other required items ready in advance, as listed in the university's instructions.
- Plan your journey. Check the test center location and travel time, and arrive early.

During the Test:

- Read each question carefully. Many mistakes come from misreading, not lack of knowledge.
- Use elimination. Remove clearly wrong options first to improve your chances on difficult questions.
- Stay calm. If you feel stuck or anxious, take a deep breath and move on to the next question.
- Trust your preparation. Avoid changing answers without a clear reason.
- Follow the instructions. Read all directions given by the invigilator or on the screen.

Mindset:

- Stay confident and positive. Your preparation matters more than any single question.
- Take care of your health. Eat well, stay hydrated, and take short breaks while studying.
