Animal rights have been a subject of growing concern across the world, but Islam, as a comprehensive way of life, addresses this issue with a profound sense of compassion and responsibility towards all living beings. To understand the importance of animal rights in Islam, it is essential to examine the treatment of animals before the advent of Islam in the Arabian Peninsula.

In pre-Islamic Arabia, animals were often mistreated and viewed merely as property. The harsh desert environment and the nomadic lifestyle of the Arabs contributed to a lack of awareness and sensitivity towards the welfare of animals. Exploitation, cruelty, and neglect were unfortunately prevalent practices. They used to tie animals together and kill animals in front of other animals. There were also customs where some body parts of animals were cut while they were still alive. It was also a tradition among some Arab tribes that when the owner or the rider of an animal died, his riding animal was tied to his grave and was starved to death.

The advent of Islam marked a transformative period in the treatment of animals. Numerous references in the Holy Quran and Hadith provide guidance of the ethical treatment of animals. There are more than 200 Ayahs in the Quran dealing with animals and six Surahs of the Quran are named after animals or insects: Surat 2, Al Baqarah (The Cow); Surat 6, Al Anaam (The Cattle), Surat 16, Al Nahl (The Bees); Surat 27, Al Naml (The Ants); Surat 29, Al Ankabut (The Spider); and Surat 105, Al Fil (The Elephant). Note: Question No. (i) about summary carries 6(5+1) marks while the rest of the questions carry 03 marks each. (6+4 x 3 = 18)

The diversity of life on Earth is essential to the health of our planet and to our wellbeing as human beings. But nature is under pressure as never before. Our needs for food, water and land, and our demands for energy is destroying habitats, polluting our air and water, and driving species of animals and plants to extinction. We are now losing biodiversity up to ten thousand times faster than it was disappearing 100 years ago.

"We are in a bottleneck of overpopulation and wasteful consumption that could push half of Earth's species to extinction in this century". E.O Wilson.

More people need more space. Damaging human activity continues to encroach on natural environments, thereby destroying the habitats of countless species. As our numbers rise, cities, infrastructure, and agricultural land are growing and merging with each other, fragmenting the remaining habitat and leaving isolated "islands" of natural populations of plants and animals which are too small to survive. Humankind's relentless consumption of resources such as timber, oil and minerals is continuing to destroy natural habitats around the globe.

Our planet is on the verge of a climate crisis due to our endless production of greenhouse gases including carbon dioxide and methane. We are headed for a 3-4°C warmer world by the end of the century. We are already seeing species decline due to global temperature increase.

As populations increase, the disposal of waste from households, agriculture and industry, becomes an increasingly serious issue. Our oceans are becoming choked with plastic waste which is killing millions of animals, from sea turtles to whales. The Ellen MacArthur Foundation estimates that by 2050, there will be more plastic than fish in the sea. As well as affecting the lives of humans, noise, light and chemical pollutions all damage the health of different species.

Note: Question No. (i) about summary carries 6(5+1) marks while the rest of the questions carry 03 marks each. (6+4 x 3 = 18)

Drug abuse may start as a way to socially connect. People often try drugs for the first time in social situations with friends and acquaintances. A strong desire to fit into the group can make it feel like doing the drugs with them is the only option. As drug abuse takes hold, you may miss or frequently be late for work or school, your job performance may progressively deteriorate, and you may start to neglect social or family responsibilities. Your ability to stop using is eventually compromised. What began as a voluntary choice has turned into a physical and psychological need. Eventually drug abuse can consume your life, stopping social and intellectual development. While each drug produces different physical effects, all abused substances share one thing in common: repeated use can alter the way the brain functions.

In recent years, prescription drug abuse has also become an escalating problem, most commonly involving opioid painkillers, anti-anxiety medications, sedatives, and stimulants. Many people start taking these drugs to cop with a specific medical problem like taking painkillers following injury or surgery. However, over time, increased doses are needed to achieve the same level of pain relief and some users can become physically dependent, experiencing withdrawal symptoms if they try to quit. One of the earliest warning signs of a developing problem is going through the medication at a faster-than-expected rate. In other cases, people start abusing medication not prescribed for them to experience a high relieve of tension, increase alertness, or improve concentration. To avoid developing problems with a prescription medication, it's important to take it only as directed. Use the lowest dose for the shortest period possible, and talk to your doctor about other methods of treating the problem.
